

Raw Beauty

I was born out of curiosity
The rawness of who I am
Is carefully polished of of me
And slowly
My true nature is appearing
Layer by Layer
I'm being undressed
To free the suppressed
Beauty on the inside of me
When I close my eyes
A whole other reality will arise
The one you don't see from your point of view
And I don't blame you
For not seeing the true value
Of my being
All I wish for is one day you'll love me
Not for what you see
But what you feel
About that special part of me that is real
When all the covers are falling of Transforming into dust
Nakedness is what is left
Depending on our hopeful trust
That nobody will laugh at us
And we won't be undermined
Cause if we're digging deep enough
Equality is what's we'll find
You and me, together or apart
Are much more alike than you assumingly believe
For we both own lungs that breathe
And carry hearts that beat
Now close your eyes
And just try to see
That you and me are equally Raw Beauty

By Victoria Monshouer